

TAKEOVER

"It was Lieutenant Brogan and Officer Haldane. They shot that man out of the sky without provocation...murdered him in cold blood."

One by one, witnesses take the stand. First, Miles Yorba, a Creon businessman. Then Officer Jane Castle. One by one, under oath, they step forward to relate the horrific tale of what they saw - Brogan and Haldane relentlessly chasing a sports Hopper, firing mercilessly at its driver, licking their chops with delight when their missile turns the Hopper into a fireball. Could this be true? Brogan and Haldane - cold-blooded murderers?

Someone must want to see Brogan and Haldane go down! Whoever it is has found a way to hypnotically alter the memories of the witnesses. There is, however, one witness who is immune to hypnosis - Slomo, the RSA unit. Soon however, Slomo becomes infested with a virus that shuts the machine down for good. Is this the work of gangster kingpin Vanus Olvera? Olvera would do anything to discredit the officers who are trying to pin a rap on him.

In fact, it is Olvera, but he's not alone. Working with him is Cambria Elon, a visiting official from the Interplanetary Police Department. It is she who is actually hypnotizing the witnesses. Now Olvera wants a little extra insurance that Brogan and Haldane will be framed for murder. He instructs Cambria to murder his attorney. She complies - and hypnotizes Haldane into believing that Brogan pulled out a gun and blew the attorney away - in cold blood. Brogan is now considered a fugitive from justice. He tries to hide but can't. Officers Podly, Romek, Fredo, Took & Castle launch a full search. Captain Podly orders Haldane to shoot Brogan on sight. With moments ticking away, Brogan rushes to Slomo's side. and finds that the unit has just enough energy to access its video memory. Haldane finds Brogan and draws his gun. Just as he is about to shoot Slomo manages to get enough power to play the video of what actually happened during the incident. The sight of reality on the screen snaps Castle and Haldane back to reality. They go after Cambria, leading to a full pardon of Brogan and Haldane by the disciplinary committee.
